(Studentų str. 39 a, Vilnius)

STUDY PROGRAMMES:

Early Childhood Education

This program prepares graduates to work as early childhood and pre-primary teachers in various educational, social care, and informal education settings. Graduates will understand child development from 0 to 7 years old, apply methods for identifying and addressing individual needs, and manage the educational process effectively. They will develop child-centered curricula, use innovative teaching methods like experiential learning, and foster active parental involvement in education. Emphasis is placed on respecting each child's individuality, collaborating with educational professionals, and promoting inclusive, tolerant environments. Graduates will also engage in lifelong learning, reflect on their professional practices, and uphold ethical and democratic values.

Pedagogy of Primary Education

This study program prepares graduates to work as primary teachers or specialists in general education schools, equipping them to create inclusive, innovative, and engaging learning environments. Graduates will analyze global and local educational trends, apply sustainable teaching strategies, and understand pupil development to address individual needs effectively. The program emphasizes using modern technologies, ICT, and assessment methods to enhance education quality and foster virtual learning spaces. Strong communication and collaboration skills are developed for working with families, colleagues, and multicultural communities. Humanistic and democratic values are instilled alongside practical skills for pre-primary education, ensuring graduates can support young children's self-expression and competencies. Lastly, the program fosters reflection, goal-setting, and continuous professional growth for lifelong career development.

Social work

This program prepares graduates to work as social workers in diverse public and private sectors, including social security, healthcare, education, and law enforcement agencies. Graduates will apply theories from social sciences and humanities to address social issues, conduct research, and implement innovative solutions in social work practice. They will assess client needs, develop support plans, and collaborate with institutions to promote social welfare while advocating for human rights and reducing social exclusion. Emphasis is placed on ethical principles, effective communication in various languages, and teamwork to build trust and enable clients' self-help. Lifelong learning, critical reflection, and professional development are key components of the program.
